28 Mar Sometimes there is harm in asking. Sometimes you hurt a friendship when you ask for something you shouldn't. Sometimes you ruin a business deal when you ask for something. The truth is, there's a fine line between hustler and jerk. You and I both have friends that over ask. They demand favors, make constant requests and feel like leeches.

If a speaker's meaning is to emphasize the 'asking' then the question could be put with stress on asking and with the possessive adjective - "Do you mind my asking?" - although me could be used here, too. Some verbs can never take a possessive adjective before a gerund. An example is keep as in "My neighbour kept me speaking for hours."

Gerund, possessive: Do you mind <me, my> asking ...
