When he is alone, on the other hand, the actor must display every technical fault for which bad actors are criticized.... He must deliver the lines of his soliloquies in such a way that he makes nonsense of them." It may be a considerable time before this theatrical ideal is realized. Auden is playful.

By Maria Popova. Rendering Tolstoy's prescriptive reading list for every stage of life moot, Auden considers the organic evolution of our taste in reading over a lifetime: Good taste is much more a matter of discrimination than of exclusion, and when good taste feels compelled to exclude, it is with regret, not with pleasure.
