In Leo Tolstoy's short story "The Devil," the confusion and eventual destruction of the main character in the story originates from his faulty assumptions about the women in his life. In the story, the main character seems to perceive the two women in his life in an entirely different physical manner.

The stories collected in The Devil and Other Sorties may cross much of Count Leo Tolstoy's literary life. The themes in each seem to carry too much of his later conclusions that fiction should be written for the peasants and be little more than restatements of existing traditions and promote specific values.

The Devil runs but fifty pages. The only flaw we could find was Tolstoy's Evgeny-like ambivalence, in this case, about the ending. He wrote one version in 1889 having our noble lord put a bullet through his head because he couldn't handle the ambivalence: comfortable marriage on the one hand with Liza of the long nose,...

Leo Tolstoy is known for epic novels that brilliantly dissect society, but the novella The Devil may be the most personally revealing—and startling—fiction he ever wrote. He thought it so scandalous, in fact, that he hid the manuscript in the upholstery of a chair in his office so his wife wouldn't find it, and he would never allow it to be published in his lifetime.
