Creation of the character. Hook did not appear in early drafts of the play, wherein the capricious and coercive Peter Pan was closest to a "villain" but was created for a front-cloth scene depicting the children's journey home. Later, Barrie expanded the scene, on the premise that children were fascinated by pirates, and expanded the role of the captain as the play developed.

Chabrier's Joyeuse Marche could have been written for the NYO, although its members would have to be 150 years old for this actually to be the case. It's only very brief but it packs a powerful punch and it's music that seems to smile all over its face. The young players, under their energetic conductor Chris George, captured all its bounce and rhythmic quirkiness to perfection, launching their ...
