Thomas Clark. In The Problem of the Soul, Owen Flanagan, professor of philosophy, psychology, and brain sciences at Duke University, takes the unpopular position that all this is wrong. There is a conflict at the deepest level, he says, between traditional mind-body dualism and the scientific truth about the self,...

Review of The Problem of the Soul (2005) - Atheism

Two visions of mind and how to reconcile them. Human beings are said by Christians to be made in the image of God, and the human will therefore shares in the freedom and arbitrariness of the divine Will. The soul is unconstrained. But since the soul is the brain, it cannot be free in this absolute sense; it is subject to natural laws.
