Sepphoris, a ruined city 6.5 kilometres northwest of Nazareth, was the capital of Galilee during the time of Jesus. Though it is not mentioned in the New Testament, it is of interest to Christian pilgrims for two main reasons: • The rebuilding of the city by Galilee’s ruler, Herod Antipas, may have attracted the building tradesman Joseph and his wife Mary to settle in Nazareth when they ...

POMPEIAN BROTHELS Brothels played an important economic role in Pompeii at the time of the eruption. The population oscillated between eight and twelve thousand inhabitants and for this population 35 brothels have been counted (this includes the different types of brothel which include those in private houses) but it is interesting to compare this figure with the quantity of bakeries at the ...

History of Frescoes from Pompeii & Herculaneum

In the past, walls were decorated in some fashion, usually by painting directly upon the plaster. Later, tapestries, silk and paneling took the place of this fresco work and in the homes of the wealthy, giving a beautiful decorative background for the architectural finish and detail of the other furnishings.

The History of Mazes and Labyrinths Ancient Architectural Mazes: Pyramids and Palaces. Although the true origins of the maze probably go back to neolithic times, the earliest mazes we know of were actually parts of architectural monuments built in Egypt and on Crete (an island in the Mediterranean) about 4000 years ago.
