She thinks I'm a monster, and maybe I am. I taunt her with my touch, get a thrill out of torturing her soul. But I'm not the only one. The world is full of monsters, and I'm not the most dangerous one out there. Not even close... God help me, I love her. I do. And God help anyone who tries to take her from me.

I thought she was it, thought she was the only one who would ever reach me, the only one to beat through this battered armor I wear. I thought my ability to love ended with her, and I was fine with that. I live my life in excess because it leaves me satisfied. Love, on the other hand, hurts like a son of a bitch.

Karissa drops to her knees, wrapping her arms around the dog as she starts sobbing. She loses it. She cries long and hard. She's in pain. Torture. I can feel it emanating from her. It exists deep down in her soul. It's not about the dog, I know. It isn't even really about her mother, and it certainly isn't her father. It has nothing to do with him.

Torture to Her Soul was just as good as Monster in His Eyes. If anything, it might have been a little bit better! Naz never meant to care for Karissa. He certainly never meant to fall in love with her. When he met her, he wanted one thing and one thing only. The monster in him wanted her for revenge. But now, things have changed.

I think everyone who read the first book in the series "Monster In His Eyes", (where the narrator in Karissa) was happy to hear that the second book will be entirely told from Naz's POV. I definitely was and I enjoyed tremendously being in Naz's head! "Torture to Her Soul" picks up right where the first book ends.
