Along with a full load of Tribeca Film Festival press screenings, I have also managed to watch The More the Merrier twice in two days. I've had some long days recently. It's comforting to come home, flop in a chair, and lose myself in this adult comedy which has elements of a French farce (that apartment, and all those slamming doors and different entrances!) as well as a straight-up to ...

We've misdiagnosed a marriage that has terminal cancer and treated it as if it were only suffering from a common cold. We've also misplaced the responsibility for keeping the marriage alive by putting an extraordinarily heavy burden on a wife's shoulders to somehow maintain a loving and warm relationship with a husband who treats her with cruelty, disrespect, deceit, and gross indifference.

Who knew the ability to form a relationship was nearly a lost art? "Over half of America is single, for the first time." The screen shot with that startling fact opens a unique documentary about to come out in theaters in the U.S. on April 17. "It's kind of old fashioned to go on a date," says a voice over camera shots of young adults hanging out together and yet somehow disengaged.
