The scenes with the hooligans are the film's most exuberant and playful ones. In fact, Strike is an almost never-ending string of "attractions," in their more primary sense of circus entertainment. Eisenstein plays on the contrast between light and dark (especially in the scenes with spraying water); on relative volumes and sizes (in the scene with the dancing midgets); and on visible ...

Floundering for some way to describe obtuse or complex art, critics often rely on the adjective "poetic". It can come to mean nearly anything in this context and the word loses any descriptive power. In The Colour of Pomegranates (Sayat Nova), the late Soviet director, Sergei Paradjanov, makes an earnest attempt to fuse poetry and [...]

I would probably go with Alexander Nevsky, directed by Sergei Eisenstein. It certainly played a pretty big role in stirring up Soviet citizens to fight the Germans during WWII. It also has played a massive role in coloring public perception of the Teutonic Knights.

Documentary Films strictly speaking, are non-fictional, "slice of life" factual works of art - and sometimes known as cinema verite. For many years, as films became more narrative-based, documentaries branched out and took many forms since their early beginnings - some of which have been termed propagandistic or non-objective.
