Jack London: The Road

This is Jack London's memoir and account of becoming a "road-kid" and eventually transitioning to become a full fledged ho-bo in the early 1900's. Hopping trains and `holding her down' so as to get to the next stop where he could `stretch his legs' and beg for money or food hoping for a `set-down' (which is just cause to miss the next train out).

THE ROAD "Pinched" I rode into Niagara Falls in a "side-door Pullman," or, in common parlance, a box-car. A flat-car, by the way, is known amongst the fraternity as a "gondola," with the second syllable emphasized and pronounced long. But to return. I arrived in the afternoon and headed straight from the freight train to the falls.
