The 100 best novels: No 36 - The Golden Bowl by Henry James (1904) For me, the dominant theme - very close to James's heart - is the story of Maggie Verver's education, both literal and emotional, and her subtle resolution of an impossible and perhaps dreadful situation. At the end, Maggie has saved her marriage,...

Community Reviews. The Golden Bowl, set in England and in Italy during 1903 to 1906, is the story of four people, two men and two women, and two marriages. Although The Portrait of a Lady will no doubt always be Henry James' most read and most loved novel, I think The Golden Bowl is his masterpiece.

The Golden Bowl by Henry James - Goodreads

The golden bowl portends an uncertain relationship in the pending marriage of Prince Amerigo and Maggie. It appears to be perfect but Amerigo has seen the crack in it. If you are a reader seeking action, exciting plots or a fast read, forget about Henry James. James is a master of verbal, human portraits. His style is Victorian.
