Mental hospitals. Apart from some high security hospitals, such as Rampton (near Retford) and Broadmoor, most mental health care comes under community-based mental health and social care; which means any care or support received to help you manage a mental health problem while you are living in the community (i.e. not in hospital).

No asylum or mental institution is a happy place by any stretch of the imagination. The fact of the matter is that when mental institutions, and the accepted approach to mental health, were in their infancy, many patients were mistreated and even died. To say that these buildings have witnessed much ...
