A wartime tragedy revisited. Jessica Francis Kane begins her novel with the preface of The 9/11 Commission Report: "We want to note what we have done, and not done.". Her story focuses on another human tragedy, in the East End of London on 3 March 1943, when 173 residents of Bethnal Green rushing into the tube station-turned-air-raid shelter were...

The Report, By Jessica Francis Kane | The Independent

An inquiry into a mysterious death in wartime London reopens old wounds in this intriguing novel. Jessica Francis Kane captures the relentless bleakness of the time, with its multiple war-induced deprivations, and the tight-lipped endurance of Bethnal Green's inhabitants – although unoriginal scene-setting such as a reference to the Queen being able to look the East End in the face once Buckingham Palace was hit may annoy British readers.
