Scattering is a general physical process where some forms of radiation, such as light, sound, or moving particles, are forced to deviate from a straight trajectory by one or more paths due to localized non-uniformities in the medium through which they pass. In conventional use, this also includes deviation of reflected radiation from the angle predicted by the law of reflection.

RankWithinLocationCluster – among all rows/dots that share a Cluster value with this dot, how does this one “rank” in terms of its [Index] value? In this case, we’re not ranking in the “scoring” sense – the Index value is pretty damn arbitrary here, but since [Index] is numeric and unique, we can use RANKX to essentially make sure that we don’t move dots around and simply ...

When it comes to data visualization, flashy graphs can be fun. But if you're trying to convey information, especially to a broad audience, flashy isn't always the way to go. Last week I showed how to work with line graphs in R. In this article, I'm going to talk about creating a scatter plot in R. Specifically, we'll be creating a ggplot scatter plot using ggplot's geom_point function.
