Remembering the sound of letting go. From the screech and hiss of the air brakes, to the giant mechanical claws wrapping around the bins, to pounds of glass, and plastic falling from one container to the next, my eyes flew open. The clattering metal and machinery, humming diesel engine and whooshing hydraulics filled my ears and mind.

Wind from the torn cosmos whipped around them. It tugged at their cloaks, made Thor have to squint in order to see. Jagged shards of broken bridge cut into his cheek, but he refused to let go of the spear. It was all that kept his brother from falling. But then there was that look, and Loki released his end. "No!" Thor shouted it over the wind.
