Saira Shah's 'Mouse-Proof Kitchen'. All, of course, does not turn out so well. Since Provence is now almost as pricey as Islington, the couple is forced westward into the harsher hinterland of the Languedoc, where Tobias sweet-talks Anna into buying Les Rajons, a hilltop wreck with staggering views and, the locals hint, a tragic past.

Mary P. (Bellingham, WA) Mouse-Proof Kitchen by Saira Shah. I thoroughly enjoyed this book with its intelligent, idiosyncratic characters, and its descriptions of Provence. The main character, it can be argued as the plot and characters revolve around her, is Freya, the infant daughter of Anna and Tobias.

Anna, Tobias, and their daughter, Freya, end up in a rickety, rodent-infested farmhouse in a remote town in France—far from the mansion in Provence they had imagined. Little do they know that this is the beginning of what will become an incredible journey of the heart—one during which they learn there really is no such thing as a mouse-proof kitchen.

Humor in The Mouse-Proof Kitchen becomes a still more anarchically life-affirming response to disaster. What might well, as the author has acknowledged in interviews, have been a "misery memoir" is instead a gutsy recital of all the wildly inappropriate jokes, crockery smashing, extramarital dalliances and unheroic efforts to escape child care ...
