Kaluma ya Salaam. Both inherently and overtly political in content, the Black Arts movement was the only American literary movement to advance "social engagement" as a sine qua non of its aesthetic. The movement broke from the immediate past of protest and petition (civil rights) literature and dashed forward toward an alternative that initially seemed unthinkable and unobtainable: Black Power.

This essay is written against the prevailing Black Power nostalgia that informs contemporary struggles against police violence. I argue that the discourse of black ethnic politics that is popular among anti-racist activists is an outgrowth of the class fragmentation and anti-communism of the Cold War period, when black and white came to signify the new urban spatial-class divides.
