The Red Tree Caitlin R

I have admired Caitlin Kiernan's short stories for some time now, so I was excited about finally getting to one of her novels. I wasn't disappointed. The Red Tree is a very ambitious effort, an accomplished metafiction that is certainly horrific, but also stands as a piece of literature. It's a damn shame the book is saddled with some of the ...

Would you try another book from Caitlin R. Kiernan and/or the narrators? Yes, I might. What other book might you compare The Red Tree to and why? I'm not sure there's one that compares exactly. It has a "falling down the rabbit hole" surreal feel to it. Which scene was your favorite? The story about the woman on the cliff.

The Red Tree, by Caitlín R. Kiernan (2009) | The Black Letters

Caitlin R. Kiernan, surely one of America's finest (and darkest) writers, returns with "The Red Tree"; and she's coming from a new direction. Using first-person narration for the first time insofar as I know, she's created what's apparently a semi-autobiographical novel, and she distances it from herself by tagging it as a novel by Sarah Crowe ...
