There is no difference. (There isn't any difference.) I've heard it said that there is a tendency to use the first pattern with abstract ideas and the second pattern with concrete objects. It's not completely clear to me whether this is true. I'm not aware of any study that has found a definite difference between the two.

To be fair to the O.P., an Ngram shows "there isn't" seems to be preferred over "there's not," so there might be some merit to the assertion that one seems more awkward than the other in certain situations. But I stand by my answer: there are times when either would beg for improvement, and other situations where either works just fine.
