The Brethren A Painted House

Only reading A Painted House - I probably would give this a 3.5 in the rating. Some parts were slow but Grisham always spins a good story, as he did with A Painted House. I really liked the main character, who was a 7 year old, but in the story he seemed much older than 7 so I think Grisham should have at least made him to be a 10 year old.

A Painted House, which Grisham first serialized in his magazine, The Oxford American, depicts the simple but hardscrabble life of an Arkansas farming family during the early '50s. Loosely based on experiences from Grisham's own childhood, this poignant story lacks the legal maneuvering and courtroom scuffles he is best known for.
