Note how the bullet points above follow the same pattern; each starts with a verb in the imperative form (plan, organize, chop, consider). Also, research shows that when you present people with a list of words, they'll remember the first and last items most. Assuming the same applies to bulleted lists, it's wise to put your most important points first and last.

Last year, bullet journaling became all the rage on my Instagram feed: gorgeous notebooks, pastel pen colors, and neatly lettered to-do lists with a heavy dose of... perfection. I was curious, but considering my planner style is something like Jot Down Messy Notes on a Random Piece of Paper and Then Cross Them Off, I figured I couldn't possibly handle the trend.
