Charles Darwin first expressed his ideas on sexual selection and mate choice in his book The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex in 1871. He was perplexed by the elaborate ornamentation that males of some species have, because such features appeared to be detrimental to survival and to have negative consequences for reproductive success.

Any animal whose genital evolutionary pattern resembles a Cold War arms race deserves some attention from the scientific community. The complexity of male and female ducks' reproductive organs indicates just this. Their reproductive organs have co-evolved in a "sexual arms-race" resulting in large corkscrew phalluses and complicated vaginal tracts.

Sexual selection is Darwin's second great insight, and he defined it as depending on "the advantage which certain individuals have over other individuals of the same sex and species solely in respect of reproduction". So sexual selection can be thought of as intra-specific reproductive competition.
